COMMERCIAL HVAC DUCT CLEANING

BREATH IN FRESH AIR

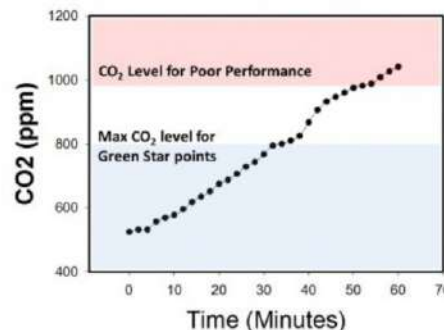

“It's extremely important to keep ducts clean in newly constructed Building. If they [ducts] are not clean from the very beginning It's an IAQ issue, but it's also an HVAC performance issue, because once the blower wheel starts getting caked, the underside of the Air coil is going to get caked. Once that happens, airflow drops, static pressure increases, the efficiency of the equipment drops, and you're not getting the performance you'd expect out of your brand new heating and cooling system.”

Indoor air quality (IAQ) is a term which refers to the air quality within and around buildings and structures, especially as it relates to the health and comfort of building occupants.

Why the duct cleanliness is very important?

Owners and their construction representatives are also recognizing that inadequate job site cleanup practices and temporary operation of the HVAC systems during construction can have a negative impact on future HVAC system maintenance costs and employee productivity.

The bigger issue further on down the line is that the ductwork should never actually get dirty. If you have dirt in a duct system, something is broken. The supply side has cracked, or the ductwork is falling apart and creating something called the Venturi Effect that starts sucking insulation, dust particulates, and more out of the attic. The contaminants in attics are horrible — things like bugs, insects, rodents and their feces and urine. A rodent doesn't have any bladder control, so as it walks, it urinates. As the urine dries, it forms a crystal that people with asthma are highly allergic to.

The causes of ducts get dirty while construction....!

Lack of General job site cleanup, if the material storage done not properly , and work scheduling. Although many of these functions may not be the responsibility of the duct installer, awareness of their impact and better job site coordination can improve the cleanliness of the work environment.

The level and timing of cleanup procedures on the job site can have a direct impact on the cleanliness of the HVAC system installation, regardless of which trades are involved. Most of the times there were no good housekeeping procedures are not followed by everyone, there will be a much greater potential for contamination of the duct systems.

Job site duct material storage areas not always been located away from high dust generating processes such as masonry or tile cutters, cutoff saws, drywall sanding, mortar and plaster mixers, roof pitch kettles, portable electric generators, and main walkways that will be constantly broom swept. It causes the heavy contamination and the dust formation inside the duct .

Lack of Pallet or fabricated metal ductwork above the floor surface for blocking from the standing water.

There are many simple work site scheduling procedures , and if it happens on appropriate time, that can be caused to keep the duct system not clean during installation and system startup. There are times when the HVAC system must be continuously operated while the building is still under construction to maintain required temperature or humidity levels for other construction activities.

During star top operation of the HVAC system, special care should be taken to protect the return air system by installing temporary filters at the air handling unit. Most of the times its not happening in the construction sites.

KITCHEN DUCT CLEANING

The build up of grease and fat deposits in commercial kitchens is a serious fire risk and if kitchen duct cleaning is not carried out regularly your insurance may be invalid. In fact, it is now a requirement of insurance companies that all grease extraction plant and ducting is cleaned frequently by an accredited specialist company.

WHY SHOULD CLEAN KITCHEN DUCT?

A high flame either flares up or is created on the stove top. The flame comes in contact with the filters located in the kitchen hood and they are ignited. With the exhaust fan on drawing in air, the flames are also drawn upward in to the duct work. If sufficient grease residue exists within the ducts, it can act as a source of fuel, carrying the fire further in to the exhaust system causing significant damage.

WHAT WE DO?

We use several safe methods for cleaning, one of which is a rotating brush and high-pressure steam nozzle. The other method involves a technician descending in the ducts depending upon the size of the duct to manually clean the duct.

We Clean: All commercial and public buildings likes offices, hotels, hospitals, school, factories, shops, shopping malls, etc.

HOW OFTEN IT HAS TO BE CLEANED

How often the glass needs to be cleaned will depend on the surrounding environmental conditions and pollution levels. Glass gets dirtier in dusty, industrial areas, in areas with lots of road traffic, near the sea, and when it is not exposed to very much rain. Failure to take certain precautions when designing the facade or installing the glass can also play a role. (e.g.: a roof glazing shall have a minimum slope of 10° vs horizontal). Glass should be cleaned frequently enough so that the ordinary cleaning regimen described above is sufficient. The recommended minimum frequency is every six months.

INITIAL CLEANING AFTER THE GLASS IS INSTALLED

When glass is cleaned for the first time after being installed (end of project), it may be particularly dirty. We recommend the following steps:

- Remove labels and adhesive cork or interlayers as soon as possible. If there is any difficulty in doing so, solvents such as methanol, isopropanol, acetone, trichloroethylene may be used.
- Fingerprints and grease or mastic stains can be removed with solvents such as acetone, methylethyceton (MEC) or ammonia provided that these products do not attack the seals and penetrate into the rebate.
- Rinse thoroughly to remove as much dust as possible.
- Perform the ordinary cleaning regimen. Examine any remaining dirty marks.
- Very carefully remove the majority of any remaining deposits of sealing compound, putty, cement, etc. using a specially designed scraper or a razor blade. There is a risk of scratching the glass, so take great care at all times. This is especially true for coated glass
- Perform the special cleaning regimen where necessary.

ORDINARY GLASS CLEANING

In most cases, glass can be washed with plenty of clean water. Sometimes a bit of neutral detergent or an appropriate commercial cleaning product can be added to the water. A squeegee or specially designed cloths are also used. Once cleaned, the glass should be rinsed with clean water and wiped with a squeegee.

GARBAGE CHUTE CLEANING

Emerald will use specialised equipment to remove the dirt and grime that builds up on the inside walls of the garbage chute itself. Garbage chute cleaning is something that many apartment buildings, office buildings, and other commercial sites neglect, creating a risky environment for tenants. When building tenants discard their trash into a garbage chute, bags regularly open or rip. This results in wet garbage sticking to the inner walls, and dry garbage sticking to the wet garbage, creating breeding sites for Cockroaches, Flies, and odour problems.

Cleaning your garbage chute is an important part of maintaining a healthy and hygienic garbage system. We recommend that periodic chute cleaning is better for odour control.

There are 2 sources of Garbage odour and pathogens in Garbage chute from the decaying waste in your rubbish bins or compactor. build up of soiling inside the garbage chute.

BENEFITS OF CHUTE CLEANING

- Removal of odour
- Reducing health risks for tenants and staff
- Removal of bacteria, viruses and build-up of garbage
- Reducing risk of fire
- Increasing longevity of chute, compactor and bin
- Reduce rodent & insect problem

Why is garbage chute cleaning important?

Garbage/trash chutes have a naturally occurring up-draft (similar to a chimney). This causes unhealthy odours and bacteria from inside the refuse chute walls to become airborne. These airborne pathogens and odours then enter public areas as residents open the chute doors and dispose of their rubbish.
